

U-F-HOAX

BY NED BEASLEY, ERICA GRAFF,
SEAN SASS, & DAN SHAFFER

You thought making crop circles was a fun way of getting attention; at least until you drew the wrong kind. You've been abducted by the aliens you were pretending to be.

Players will attempt to learn the recursive nature of the ship's rooms while avoiding the attention or ire of the Aliens. It is advised to gatekeep "Return" via first accessing the Bridge or Stowaway

UFO ROOMS

The interior of the UFO is a disorienting maze of bright, iridescent hallways connecting areas of alien experimentation. Getting lost is easy, and getting ambushed is even easier.

You may roll 1d6 to see which room the players end up in, owing to the maze-like nature of the UFO.

Below are notable rooms containing powerful devices empowered by mechanical arms that emerge from the walls upon activation. Each room has a command terminal with two buttons with alien symbols allowing players to interact with the devices. Interacting with the devices is ill advised - but you're not here to play it safe! Fake it till you make it, baby.

START HERE! ■ RETURN RETRIEVE

The Aliens present the humans with a Tablet, showing an image of their crop circle. They wait for the humans to provide an intelligible response, and upon failing to do so the Aliens break the containment barrier to install a Universal Translator (a menacing device resembling a metallic crab) on one of them. This provides an opportunity for the humans to escape to another room aboard the ship.

The room with the tractor beam used for transport to and from the UFO. Retrieved specimens are retained in a holding area. Entities may be Returned planetside.

■ ANALYZE DISGUISE

Analyze creates stacked holograms, revealing the inner workings of whatever is probed.

Disguise hides the true nature of things. Skin-suits line the walls as potential disguises.

■ EVOLVE DEVOLVE

Evolve the subject to a level of higher function or Devolve them into a previous form.

It is likely that a creature does not appreciate the transformation and will retaliate.

What's there when you arrive?

| ■ A lizard | ■ An octopus |
| ■ A chimpanzee | ■ A house cat |
| ■ A clownfish | ■ A capybara |

■ ASSEMBLE DISASSEMBLE

Assemble produces copies of the presented entity, one per button press. It is a mostly reliable process.

Disassemble obliterates the entity, leaving a pile of dust. Could it be reassembled with Assemble?

■ BRIDGE MAP

Several hallways converge on a small room containing a dimly lit map of the UFO. This will help you find your way around.

■ STOWAWAY'S HIDEAWAY

Within the ship's walls and vents The Stowaway lives in a nest of found objects and the remains of scavenged meals. The Hideaway may be found by: hacking a terminal, disrupting the ship's infrastructure, or encountering the Stowaway sneaking through the halls.

THE ALIENS

The Aliens are incredibly patient and curious, using violence as a very last resort. They seek to observe and study the humans, though self preservation comes first.

They carry Stun Guns (2-in-6 chance to stun for 1d4 rounds) though are reluctant to use them. As the players run amok, the Aliens become more agitated until they decide to eject or dissect the humans.

The Aliens pursue the players at dramatic moments and to move the story along.

(There should be a group 1 less the players' party size, Health = Same as humans, High Intelligence, Low Stealth, Moderate Combat Ability)

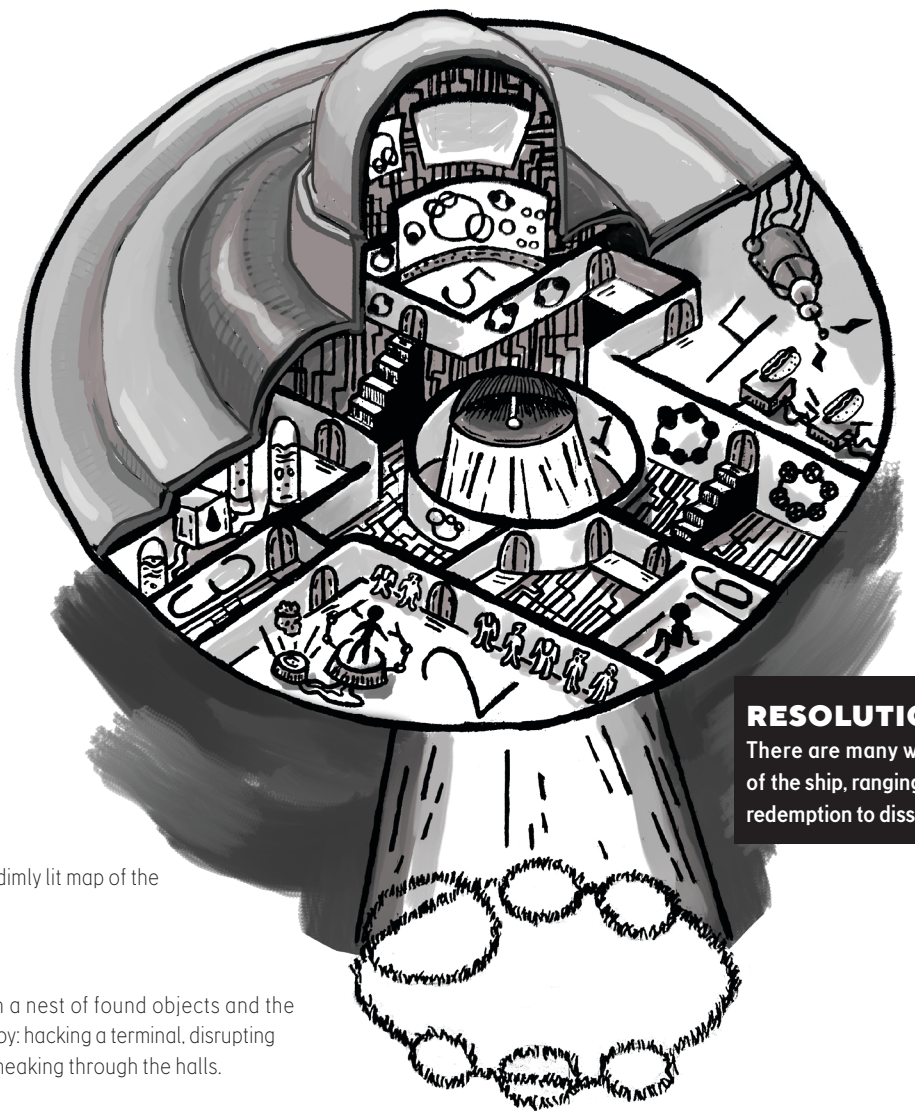

THE STOWAWAY

Disheveled, paranoid, and just a little bit unhinged, the Stowaway was a conspiracy theorist made valid through their research of the alien language, using their skills to maneuver a covert abduction. They learn quickly that the humans are frauds, and may be motivated to plot against them.

Otherwise, the Stowaway provides hints on the non-obvious (i.e. Aliens = Benign) and moves the story along.

(Health = Same as humans, High Intelligence, High Stealth, Low Combat Ability)

RESOLUTIONS

There are many ways off of the ship, ranging from redemption to dissection.
